GRACE STREET LOBBY

In the new novel from the bestselling author of Two Nights in Lisbon, on the worst night in the greatest city on Earth, a doorman at the toniest address in town is drawn into a web of intrigue, robbery, and murder. Chicky Diaz stands on his little patch of the earth, the clean quiet sidewalk in front of the Bohemia Apartments, there sure are a lot of great places to kill someone in this city. Chicky Diaz is everyone's favorite doorman at the Bohemia, New York City's world-famous home of celebrities, financiers, and the cultural elite.

"A kaleidoscopic portrait of New York at a singularly strange moment . . . With its laser-sharp satire, it's delicious set pieces in both rich and poor neighborhoods—a co-op board meeting, a Harlem food pantry and more—and its portrait of a restive city torn apart by inequality, resentment and excess, THE DOORMAN naturally invites comparison to The Bonfire of the Vanities. But Pavone's humor is more humane, his sympathy for the characters' struggles and contradictions more acute. With his eye for absurdity and ear for nuance, he seems as if he's writing not from some elevated place high above the city, but from within it. The New York Times
